What is a jungle?

Jungles are forests with dense, tangled vines, grasses, tree roots, thorny bushes and other plants covering the forest floor. It's very difficult to move through a jungle if you're a human!

Jungles are a bit different to forests in the United Kingdom, which often have lots of space on the ground below the tall trees*.

*Usually due to human activity - forestry.

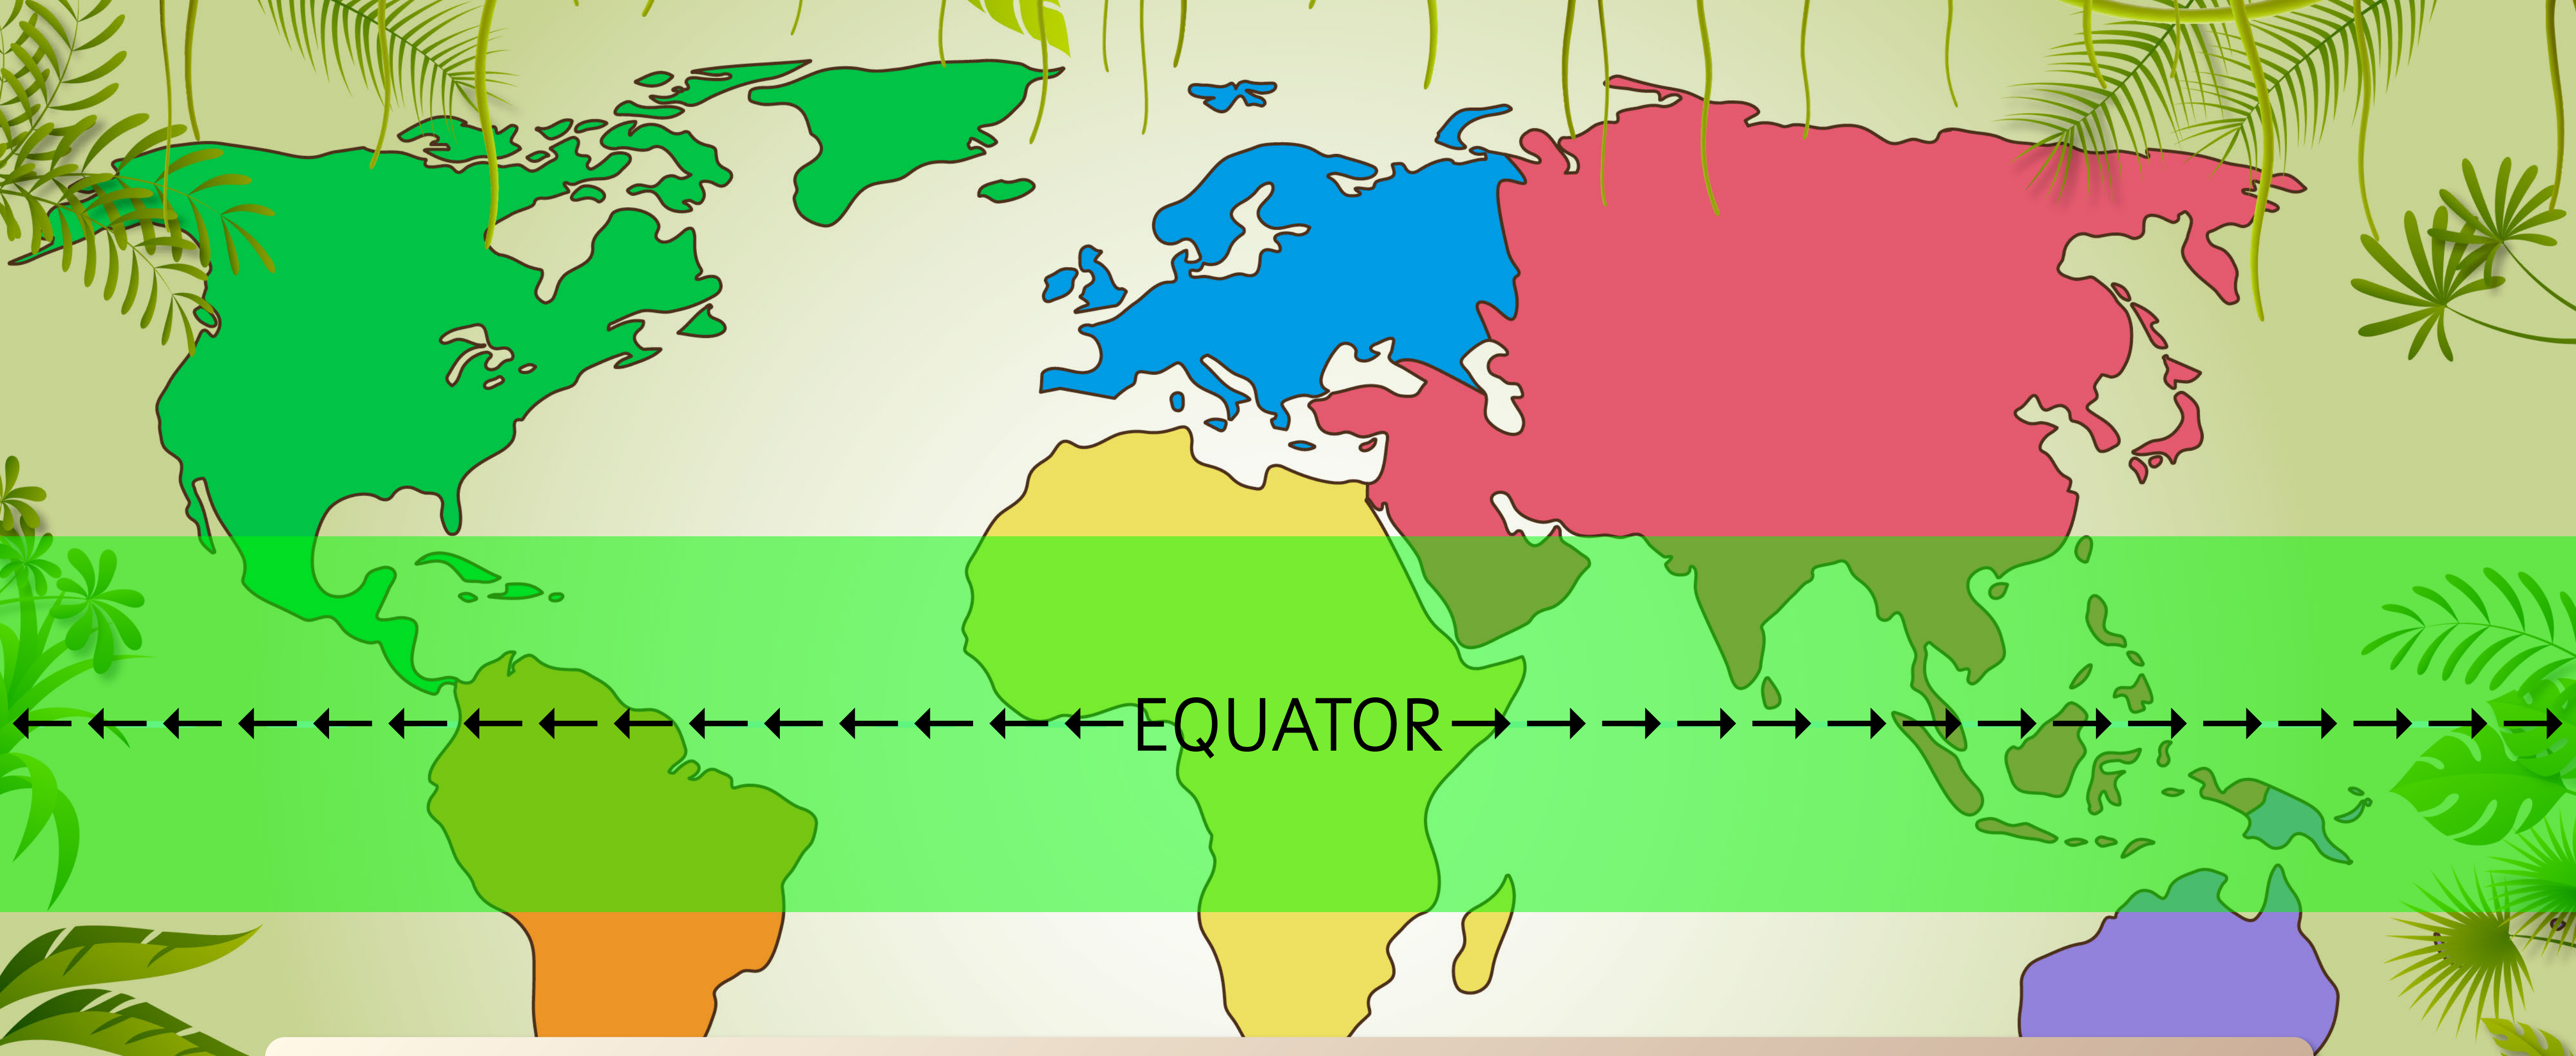

Where in the world are jungles found?

Jungles are found near or on the Equator, an imaginary line around the middle of the world. It's hotter and wetter near the Equator. Jungles grow well in these conditions.
