

How do settlements change?

Key words

Farming agriculture caravan craft homes car parks grown live holiday tourists housing Farmers in the tourist industry.

Settlements change in terms of their shape, function, land use and the type of people who live in them over time.

Firstly, the land use of the village has changed. For example in 1980 the land was used for farming and agriculture.

By 2010 it was used for other things as well such as car parks and a caravan park. This shows the area has become more popular with tourists.

Secondly, the shape has changed. For example the village has grown in size. This is because by 2010 a lot more homes have been built.

These have been built because more people want to live in the village.

Thirdly, the function has changed. For example in 1980 the main function of the settlement was a place to live.

Evidence can be seen of this from housing.

Then by 2010 the function had changed to a place to live as well as a place for tourists.

Evidence of this can be seen from the holiday homes and the craft museum,

Lastly, the people who live in the settlement would have changed. For in 1980 the people who lived there probably would have been farmers. By 2010 the people are more likely to be in the tourist industry.

This is because it is now a place where a lot of tourists may want to visit. There is the caravan park. Restaurants and lots of places to stay and things to
